BLESSING IN DISGUISE

Years ago my sister was very bold in witnessing about her faith in God. I remember thinking she was really out there - had crossed an invisible line - and it was not good.

Catholic in name only, not practicing my faith and lacking any substantive relationship with God. Still, I admired her courage in sharing her faith when those around her rejected it, and her.

Today I am different. I have returned to the faith of my childhood and God has showered down graces in abundance. Several of my other sisters and I have crossed the invisible line and boldly share our faith.

Rejection is not something we seek or desire naturally—quite the opposite. We want acceptance. We want to fit in. But Jesus tells us that we will be blessed in our rejection if it is caused by our relationship with Him.

I have joined my sister and crossed the line to boldly speak God's truth in the world. Sometimes I am rejected. It saddens me because I want to share God's love, but I remember the words of Jesus and know that my rejection is a blessing in disguise.
